WILDLIFE ORGANIZATIONS GROWING,
SAYS U. S. BIOLOGICAL SURVEY

Reg 1450

Growth of interest in wildlife conservation is reflected in the continuing increase in the number of organizations concerned with wildlife protection, says the U. S. Biological Survey in announcing publication of its thirty-sixth annual directory of national and state-wide organizations and their officials.

The 16-page list this year includes more organizations of this type than ever before, even though, as in previous years, it does not include purely local organizations.

Compiled by Frank C. Grimes, of the Survey's Division of Public Relations, the new list has been issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture as Miscellaneous Publication No. 244, under the title, "Officials and Organizations Concerned with Wildlife Protection, 1936". This directory is for officials charged with administration and enforcement of game laws and for the convenience of persons desiring to communicate with officials and organizations concerning wildlife conditions in United States, Canada, Newfoundland, or Mexico.

Copies may be obtained at 5 cents each from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C.
